

Lingerie Shop 7 - Vampire Hunting (The Lingerie Shop)

Book 7 of The Lingerie Shop series of short stories. A dark, romantic fantasy copyright 2013 Trisha Miller.

Vampire Hunting Peter gave Katya a look, Vampire hunting, Im not sure Im comfortable with this, he said. You will need the practice, before we can even attempt to take on the Guardians. You said you would help me. If you two need more time, thats fine with me, said Bill. I can think of a lot better ways of spending an evening. Peter shuffled his feet and looked down at the ground, I know I said I would help, he said, but its too weird.

Cant you just do it for me, Peter? I cant do it alone, said Katya. He looked at her lovely face, serious in the fading twilight. I dunno: for anything else Id be only be too pleased to help but this Well it just doesnt feel right. A look of incomparable sadness passed across her face. He took a deep breath, Hell! Ok: I guess Im as ready as I ever will be. Lets do it! She flung her arms around him. Brilliant! said Bill and clomped off towards his van. He emerged with three waist quivers, stuffed tight with arrows. Thats 30 each, dont waste them: I doubt well get a lot of time to fetch em back. Katya clipped a quiver on her waist band, slid an arrow out and held it in front of her, the silver head shimmering in the moonlight. She examined the mechanism, You did a brilliant job with these heads Bill. Bill grinned, revealing a gap in his front teeth from bare knuckle fighting. I do my best, Princess. Theyll shatter and drill their way through virtually any body armor, then open up like a silver flower on entry and release the shaft. The buggers will never get it out. Sounds gruesome, said Peter. I didnt think vampires wore body armor. They dont, said Katya, just the Vampire Guardians. Guardians? asked Bill. Sort of vampire police I suppose: they ensure the vampires keep to the law, said Katya. You seem to know an awful lot about them, said Peter.

Lets get going, while we still have the light, said Bill. They picked up their bows and set off silently, walking single file in the cool evening air. The track rounded the hill and started to descend down through the forest. A barn owl hooted softly in the thickening darkness. Hearing the crunch of their footsteps on the leafy forest floor, it dived from its perch in a gnarled oak tree and slid, its feathers fluttering silently, across the graveyard, ahead of them, in a long, slow glide. The three hunters set up in a small copse of trees, on a little hillock, that stood in a broad field of wheat-stubble, separated from the graveyard by a low, dry-stone wall.
