Lily's life is anything but extraordinary. She has a boring job, a lonely one-bedroom apartment and no social life. Even her family considers her the black sheep. Lily is alone in a life she never feels worth living. While clearing out her late grandmother's house, she comes across an account of her family's history dating back to the 1300s in medieval Europe. Fascinated, she reads it cover to cover and is lost in the bloody and treacherous past of her ancestors. On the last page is a strange poem and as she reads the final words, everything fades to black. She wakes up to find herself time travel to a small town in medieval England. With the help of a handsome young highlander serf who steals her heart, she learns she must undo the evils of her family in order to return to her time. During the devastating time of famine and war, the challenge alone is nearly impossible. Will she choose to right the wrongs and go back to her empty world? Will she opt to be the brave heroine and leave behind the love of her life?
