

The Origin and Development of Religious: Belief, Vol. 2 (Classic Reprint)

God, to Immortality, and to the fundamental doctrine of Christianity, the Incarnation? Hitherto Christianity has leaned, or has been represented as leaning, on authority, on the authority of an infallible text, or of an inerrable Church. The inadequacy of either support has been repeatedly demonstrated, and as the props have been withdrawn, the faith of many has fallen with a crash. The religious history of the Church exhibits three phases. The first when dogma appealed to men and met with a ready response, the second when dogma was forced on man by an authoritative society, and the third when dogma was insisted on, upon the authority of an infallible text. Men revolted against the Church, opposing the text against it, men revolt now against the text, and on what does dogma stand? To this question I offer an answer in this volume.
